Red, Rough Hands, Itching Burning Palms and Painful Finger Ends

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of CUTICURA SOAP. Dry, and anoint freely with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear, during the night, old, loose kid gloves, with the finger ends cut off and air holes cut in the palms. For red, rough, chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment is simply wonderful.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap Exclusively, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruif, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and goothing red, rough, and sore hands, in the form of boths for annoying irritations, inflammuttons, and chadlegs, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, and especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the tollet, bath, and nursery. No amount of persuasion can induce these who have once used it to use any other, especially for preserving and purifying the skin, scalp, and hair of infants and children. Currently Soar combines delicate amolient properties derived from Currently CHRA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower o lours. No other medicated soup over compounded is to be compared with it for preferring, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or demostic totlet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the tollet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the nest skin and complexion soap, the Best tollet and Best baby soap in the world. Complete External and Internal-Treatment for Every-Humour, 😁 😽

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

The public condemnation passed on the conduct of many of the generals and senior officers during the war in South Africa has at no time been directed against them personally, but against the system under which they have been trained. Their courage has been as conspicuous throughout the campaign as that shown by the junior officers, and there is no reason to think them inferior in natural ability to the average English gentlemen of their class. The chuses of their failure must, the efere, be looked for in the existing system of training, which does not develop in the individual officer the qualities which are necessary for successful leadership in modern war.

The regiment being the school for future generals, it is to the system of regiments training that attention must first be turned, in order to discover in what respect it fails, and how it can be improved. An examination of that system will show that the organisation of a battalion, and the training which depends on that organisation, are a hundred years behind time. A battalion of British infantcy has the same organisation and the same system of training as it had in the Peninsular was, where mon were brought shoulder to shoulder into battle, and kept all through the fight in close formation under the immediate hand and eye of the battalion leader. As then, so now, the whole authority, responsibility, and initiative are contralised in the hands of the battalion commander and his adjutantthe other officers being opphers except in chiefly in visiting sentries, waiting for their so far as they are required to echo the will of the commanding officer. Certain duties are expected of them and strictly enforced; but these are of a routine nature, requiring no exercise of mental power, and training the officer, not to rely on himself, but always to trust to superior guidance. Can it be a matter for wonder if, under such a system, the attention of a young officer, through no fault of his own, is gradually diverted to interests outside his profession, and if the energy which can find no scope in regimental work insists on sacking other outlets of satisfaction? The picture recently drawn in a clover brechure, entitled ! An Absent-minded War,' is a perfectly faithful representation of the daily life of the ordinary regimental officer. 'His military

As a rule, he will from the best selected medicine to have finished his work before lunch, and he used for the above Oil and even during his working hours a considerante-room. I have often wondered what proportion of an officer's time is spent that an appalling number of hours every of western lauds the benefit of his General, who having graduated in the same regimental school, have not felt any call to introduce reforms, for which in their judg-Wolseley incurred great unpopularity when iutant-General and Commander-in-Chief The medicine is to be chiefly used as a Lord-Wolseley has never felt himself strong height, with not a particle of that tendency enough to introduce the reforms necessary the hitter experience of the Boer war, with The small amount of oxide of mercury its humiliating disasters, to bring home to and sulphide of arsenie will not be danger- the public mind the necessity for changing a system which has made our officers the laughing stock of Europe, and justified the epigram so freely passed about in the foreign press that Great Britain possesses an Army of lions led by ignoranuses. Fire tactics differ from shock tactics in > requiring the dispersion instead of the massing of men. The impulse to seek cover from fire increases as the battle progresses, and the front at length becomes so extended that superior control is no longer practicable. When a battalion is launched for the attack in fighting formation, the actual executive leaders become the section and group communiders, and fire control

Internally the dose is five drops in a little | decentralisation of the battalion organisawater, and it is to be repeated every two or | tion so as to distribute the executive work | three hours, at the same time using it ex- 1 of training and internal administration among the company leaders, the higher The proprietor of the Kwong Chi Koon | control and direction remaining with the Drug Store of Canton has placed in my battalion commander. For this purpose the adjutant must be relieved of all executive functions, and be relegated to his correct position of Staff officer to the buttalion commander, each company leader being his. own adjutant and quartermaster. The interposition of the adjutant in the battalion training strikes at the root of the company commander's responsibility, and cannot be permitted to continue. The functions of commend and instruction devetail into one is no longer practicable, and it may one of the combinations which has real be asserted, as a principle not admitting of discussion, that men must be trained during peace by the officers who lead them in war. Those officers are the cantains and lieutenants of companies, not the adjutants, the mucketry instructors, and the sergeant-majors of battalions. For the purpose indicated, the present infantry company of a hundred men is too weak. After allowing for normal causes of waste, due to various reasons, its numbers dwindle down so low that its separate identity as a tactical and administrative unit cannot be preserved. The division of the battalion into four large companies of two hundred and fifty mon each, commanded by a responsible captain, is the remedy most generally suggested. In every European army except the British the four-company organisation has been adopted as being the most suited for modern fighting purposes. Though fre-quently proposed by English tecticisms, the cliange has never been approved by Lord Wolseley, on the ground that it would lead to a demand for the reduction of officers. The argument is not convincing. Efficiency Watkins & Co., General Asents.

2129 does not depend on the number but the quality of the officers, and judging from the time now wasted by most regimental officers their numbers might advantageously be reduced. The four-company organisation would give a maximum establishment of twenty officers to a battalion as against the present establishment of twenty-eight. The effect of the change would be to create within the battalion four company units sufficiently large to stand on their own feet, and admitting of a division into half-companies, each of which would be assigned to one of the company lieutenants. This organisation would give to each officer of a battalion, in descending grade of responsibility, the definite charge of a certain proportion of the men, for whose military training and administrative care he would be solely answerable. Hitherto sport, not work, has been the primary business of a young regimental officer's life. Under existing conditions he can practically obtain unlimited leave of absence in order to hunt, shoot, and fish, the theory being that war is a superior kind of sport, and that indulgence in sporting proclivities fits an officer for his duties in the field. This theore has been smashed to stome at Nicholson's Nek, Magersfentein, Stormberg, Colonso, and Spion Kop. Officers must now be taught to place their regimental duties first, and their amustments second. A young officer will enjoy a day's hunting all the more when he feels that he has been able to snatch the time with difficulty from the busy life he ought to be leading with his regiment. Bafore the tone of regimental feeling, however, can be altered in the sense indicated, it will be necessary to give officers other duties than those they now perform, and which consist colonel at the orderly room, and watching the adjutant drill their men. Fortunately there is no hesitation on the part of the officers to undertake duties, which they have long wished for, and which would have been assigned to their share before now had the higher military authorities been less absentminded, and recognised in time the neces. sity for changing a system which was well adapted to a bygone period, but is unsuited to the conditions of present-day fighting. and has hopelessly broken down under the test of the South African campaign .- The

LORD LANSDOWNE.

When the Marquis of Lansdowne was Governor-General of Canada (writes T.P. in 'M.A.P.'), he had to make a speech to able proportion of his time is spent in the the French Canadians. With all its loyalty, this little bit of transported France lounging in the ante-room. I am afraid adheres very rigidly to many things French, and especially to the purity of the French tongue—at least as it was spoken in the eighteenth century. Few Vicercys have ever ventured accordingly to leave the safe security of the English tongue, and it was with some trepidation that the French Canadians heard that Lord Lansdowne was going to deliver a speech to them in their own language. But he had scarcely utteraudience burst into cheers; they recognised at once the accent of the true French french blood, and one who had spoken

French as his mother tongue. It is, perhaps, this accomplishment which had something to do with Lord Lansdowne's latest appointment. When someone remonstrated with Lord Salisbury for retaining the two offices of Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, his reply was that he could not help himself, there was but one member of his Cabinet who could speak French, and that was Lord Lansdowne. And now, Lord Lansdowne will receive the Foreign Ambassadors every Wednesday afternoon, and whatever else I may be found fault with, his French will

In appearance the new Foreign Secretary has something of a French air and physique. He is slight, alert, of the middle to embonpoint and heaviness, which belong to the typical Saxon figure. The headlong, narrow, high, and bald at the topsomehow or other also suggests the head, you would see in a French rather than ir. an English Chamber. Lord Lansdowna is grand seigneur to his finger tips. He is incapable of prevarication-of any meanness; of anything that would not do gredit to his order. And he is consideration itself in his treatment of subordinates one of the things that made him, perhaps, less effective at the War Office, and that mo.y. on the other hand, increase his usefulness in the courtly and cautious atmosphere of diplo-

Is America to acclimatise the masal Yankee twang, and the still more terrble laxity of language, as one result of the efforts to establish an educational system in the Philippines? It looks not a little like it. A certain Mr Frederick W. HONOKONO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1900.

In a recent public speech, a prominent English statesman pleaded for a periodic stock-taking in Imporial politics. What he had in his mind was that this broad political survey would have a steadying and soboring influence on his fellow-countrymen. Of the wisdom of his advice there can be, we think, no question. Public Christmas bells'-Old Breton; 3. opinion is too often formed by irresponsible people in an irresponsible manner without regard to the teaching of history, and it would certainly have a tendency for good in international politics were the average man periodically to take stock of the position of this country in its relation to other world powers. The present is an appropriate time for one of these stocktakings in British politics, for, although centuries, after all, are but arbitrary landmarks on the sands of time, with the outgoing of the present century the minds of thoughtful men turn instinctively to the vices; the 'answering pennant' may be | contrasts and parallels afforded by a retrospect of the past hundred years. During that period, the influence of Great Britain has probably been the most powerful, the most formative force in the world's politics. What Spain was in the seventeenth and France in the eighteenth, Britain has been in the nincteenth century. For a time, towards the close of the eighteenth century, surviving the rible convulsion of the Revolution, France threatened to dominate the world. There seemed no limit to the Napoleonic ambition. Country after country fell before the ouslaught of the French armies, till at one time only one Power, and that Great Britain, stood be-Goods per Gisela undelivered after this tween Napoleon and the complete realisation of his masterful policy. Great as has been the successes of British arms, our successes in the arts of peace have been greater. One of the most striking phenomena of the century has been the growth of wealth in Great Britain due to her enterprise in industry and commerce. the daring of her sailors, the inventiveness of her manufacturers, the indomitable resourcefulness of her merchants. Other nationalities have joined issue with us, we still maintain our preeminence. There is competition shead, but if those who are to come after us act in accordance with the principles which are the basis of our greatness our sons may be trusted to carry on prestige won by British virility, honour, keener, but what of that? Froude says that 'the worst legacy which princes and statesmon could bequeath to their country, cluded. Mr C. H. Gale carried off first would be the resolution of all its por-taken for the amelioration of suffering humanity, not only by voluntary philauthropic effort but by legislative enactment, so much so that while the poles of extreme poverty and extreme wealth may be wider apart than they were a century age the general condition of the people is better, the standard of living higher, and the crying abuses less numerous.

In almost every respect, the people of Great Britain have reason for pride and satisfaction when they think of their progress during the ninetcenth century; but they must beware of arrogance and overweening self-confidence. In his capacity of Lord Rector, Lord Rosebery, a few weeks ago, discussed the subject of Imperial politics in his address to the students of Glasgow University. Answering the question of how our predominance was to be secured he reminded the students that 'the calculating tortoise in these days will always overtake the exuberant hare; and yet even the tortoise will seek to improve his pace. Everything that survives becomes refined to an art.' He concluded his stirring Norwegian, 1 Dutch and 1 Italian. address in words which may be used fittingly by us in concluding this article: Remember this historical fact. We belong to a nation which has ever been ambitious. . . But ambition, though an exalting, is an exacting virtue. It exacts constant sacrifico and untiring endea-. . Defence and readiness to fight are vital enough in their way, but not less vital is the civil and domestic side : the commerce, the education, the intelligence, the unceasing leaven of a high and the sour decadence of a low ideal. . While we see, far away on the rich horizons, growing generations fulfilling the promise, do we not own with resolution mingled with awe the honourable duty incumbent on ourselves? Shall we then falter or fail? The answer is not doubtful. We will rather pray that strength may be given us, adequate and abundant, to shrink from no sacrifice in the fulfilment of our mission; that we may be true to the high tradition of our forefathers; and that we may transmit their bequest to our children, aye, and, please God, to their remote des-is the question of the hour. The best gift for your wife is a policy of life assurance. Clothes wil wear out. A piano will get out of tune. Jowelry will become old fashioned. Bric-a-Brac will break. Most things deteriorate w'th age, BUT NOT A POLICY OF LIFE ASSURANCE, the older IT gets the more valuable it becomes.
